"India's decision on its future ties with the US is a personal matter but if it continues to support this ill-advised alliance, Iran will also be forced to consider its decision on this regard," Mohammad Javad Zarif was quoted as saying by Iran's semi-official ISNA news agency. India's foreign policy is a matter of internal affairs of the country but the US' move of seeking to form a military alliance with New Delhi, through which India is seeking to build up its military capabilities, has put "India's security at risk," he said. Zarif has for years been a vocal supporter of the 2015 Iran nuclear deal, which ended a decade-long standoff over Tehran's nuclear programme. But his comments — taken as a sign that Iranian President Hassan Rouhani's government will stick with the deal even if US President Donald Trump pulls Washington out of the pact — come as the US tries to convince other countries to join in a joint statement rejecting Trump's threat of sanctions against Iran. Trump's "decision is a bad one. It is dangerous," Zarif said. "Every time a country cuts a deal with Iran it strengthens our position. We must work with this and we will." India has repeatedly sought to balance its ties with the US and China, the former world's biggest economies.[Lymph node metastasis in patients with early gastric cancer after endoscopic resection].
