Other LGBTQ Pride Night events will be held on Sept. 9 in St. Louis and Sept. 10 in Miami. During the event, the New York Giants, Los Angeles Rams, and New Orleans Saints will wear Pride Night uniforms. NFL teams have been wearing Pride Night uniforms during the second week of each month since August 2013, with the first Pride Night game being played on Aug. 26, 2013. The second game occurred on Sept. 15, 2013. The idea came from the NFL's Senior Vice President of Social Responsibility, Joe Lockhart, who felt that the league had been doing a good job promoting diversity and inclusion with its creative in-game and out-of-game programming. "It's important to us to contribute as best we can to the diversity of this country and to the world that we live in, and I think it's an important way to get our message out," he said. "We're proud of what we do on the field, but in some ways we've been a little disconnected from the rest of society. We live in a liberal society, we have a diversity of views, and I felt that football was a good avenue in which to connect to different groups of people that we have a great relationship with. And we hope that by doing these events that we'll continue to be a part of the discussion and the work of bringing people together." "[I]t's a symbolic thing," Lockhart said. "It's how you do it in this context, and the timing on the day of the game. We're not trying to overshadow the game. We're just trying to highlight something that's important to us and continue to work on that.
