But on the day of his arrest, he broke into a store and robbed it. And then, after he was caught, the police arrested his girlfriend for the same crime. And he was "released from jail, being a habitual offender, on house arrest," while she remained in jail. So he left her on house arrest "for the rest of her life," and walked away. There is no way for a criminal to be "released" from prison. Unless, I suppose, the courts give you a suspended sentence (and maybe even then, not all states provide for that). But there is nothing "free" about "house arrest." It's not like going to work every day and getting paid. The "house arrest"
